The University of Rijeka and Lürssen Design Centre Kvarner / Maritime Centre of Excellence are proud hosts of the Third European Forum, dedicated to the 'City of Future' theme.

At a time when cities are becoming key global actors – home to more than half of the world's population and drivers of economic development – they are also increasingly facing growing social inequalities. Gentrification, rising housing costs, and the exclusion of vulnerable groups are pressing challenges for the future of urban life. How can a city ensure a sense of belonging for all its residents, despite economic disparities?

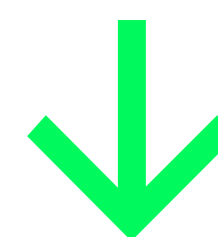

The 'City of Future' theme explores how cities not only shape economic and cultural opportunities but also create inclusive communities where every resident feels like an equal part of society, rather than just a member of narrowly defined local groups.

In line with the modern vision of universities as responsible and engaged actors in fostering social sustainability and well-being, this forum will examine what makes cities attractive and how they can become spaces of equal opportunity. The forum brings together distinguished international and national partners from the fields of higher education, science, and business to collectively explore a key question: What makes a city a city of future?

Now in its third edition, the European Forum continues to promote multilateralism and cross-sector collaboration, emphasizing the role of collective wisdom derived from dialogue between academia and the business sector, a fundamental element of the university of the future.
